A study on the creepy ambiguity and emotional creepiness that AI voice assistants users feel Liang* · Liu Kaiyu · Hyun Jung Park
ABSTRACT
examined the impacts of creepiness due to the dehumanizing of AI voi Research Methods: A structural equation model was used to analyze 747 Chinese consumer surveys.
Results in Research: The result confirmed that the anthropomorphism and dehumanizing factors consume perceived when using AI voice assistants had positive associations with both emotional creepiness and creep ambiguity, negatively affecting continuous usage intention. It suggests that dehumanizing characteristics (negati human nature, human uniqueness, agency, and experience) all could create creepy feelings in consumers.
Research Conclusion: Although artificial intelligence (AI) voice assistants are showing explosive growth various fields, recent studies show that the use of artificial intelligence voice assistants has some aspects leading adverse emotions of users. It is necessary to explore whether excessive anthropomorphism can have a negati effect on creepiness. We provide some insights and implications for future research.
